This book provides a glimpse into the diversity of the human interpretation of God and how it affects the lives of those who agreed to share their beliefs with the author. For me it was interesting to see the personality differences between people who believe God is outside of them vs. inside of them vs. non-existent and how these beliefs play into their life experience.

Some people want to ask God for more favors and some simply want to thank God over and over for their lives and loved ones. Some want to give "God" a piece of their mind and some do not even want to bother with the question or the concept.

The Author does a wonderful job of interviewing. I felt almost as if I were hearing the conversation first hand which kept me interested to the point of wishing that the conversation would not have to come to an end. Her commentary on the interviews was like reading a diary which added another level of reality to the reading.

If you like to delve into the depths of the minds of many, you will enjoy reading this book.
